USSR Credits to East Germany in 1956-57

REF: 1. Foreign Service Despatch, #214, 24 Aug 56, OUG; 2. Air Intelligence Information Report, IR-7672-56, 1 Aug 56, C; 3. Foreign Service Despatch, #24, 19 Jul 57, C.

1. In a recent article in Pravda, P. Nikitin, Deputy Chief of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, stated that credits extended to East Germany by the USSR in 1956-57 totaled 420 million rubles or $105 million. (Ref. 3). Information on file in this Office, however, shows that in July 1956 the USSR granted East Germany economic assistance totaling approximately $1.9 billion. The assistance consisted of a fifty percent reduction in the cost of Soviet troop maintenance or approximately $1.5 billion for a four year period, an atomic reactor, commodity and currency credits, and a new uranium ore pricing. (Ref. 1,2). In addition, a currency credit of $85 million was granted by the USSR to East Germany in January 1957.

2. Answers to the following questions would be useful in explaining the above discrepancy:

- a. What is the value of each individual part of the assistance?
- b. What amount is to be granted each year for each individual part of the assistance?
- c. Is the January 1957 credit separate and in addition to the currency credit granted in July 1956?
- d. Is there any explanation as to how Nikitin arrived at $105 million as the figure for credits extended in 1956-57.
